

ACADEMIC WAIVER POLICY

OVERVIEW

Academic Waivers. Any accredited college or university, as well as non-profit financial literacy programs dedicated to serve primary or secondary school students or other underserved populations, may apply to a distributor or Nasdaq to waive any fee or charge for any product or service, and used by students or professors to perform academic research or classroom-related activities.

- All such applications for waiver shall be approved by Nasdaq or the distributor based on a determination that all of the criteria set forth herein are met, specifically the following:
  - Recipients of an academic waiver must reapply on a yearly basis, must sign any agreement required to obtain that product or service; and
  - No information provided under an academic waiver may be distributed externally, except in support of non-profit financial literacy programs or to support teaching or research at an accredited college or university, or used in any way for actual (rather than simulated) trading, or to support for-profit activity, including, but not limited to, any use of Nasdaq information by an academic institution to provide services to a for-profit entity in support of any business or trading activity

The Academic Waiver Policy does not cover the following uses of data:

external distribution of the data	in support of or part of a service provided to a for profit entity university endowment programs	in support of actual securities trading
