

Nasdaq's List of Fifth Character Symbol Suffixes

For common stock issuances, Nasdaq assigns symbols between one and four characters in length.

For subordinate issue classes, Nasdaq assigns five character symbols. Within the symbols, the fifth and last character relays basic information about the issue class or issue type as outlined in the table below.

Character	Purpose	Notes
A	Class A
B	Class B
C	NextShares Exchange Traded Managed Funds	See NextShares page on the Nasdaq Trader website for more information on this asset class.
E	N/A	Nasdaq now uses the Financial Status Indicator to denote when an instrument is delinquent in regulatory filings. Other markets may still use the "E" suffix for this purpose.
F	Foreign	Suffix is issued by Nasdaq at issuer request only.
G	First convertible bond
H	Second convertible bond, same company
I	Third convertible bond, same company
J	Voting	Temporary suffix used to denote shareholder vote situation
K	Non-Voting
L	Miscellaneous situations such as certificates of participation, preferred participation, and stubs
M	Fourth preferred, same company
N	Third preferred, same company
O	Second preferred, same company
P	First preferred
Q	N/A	Nasdaq now uses the Financial Status Indicator to denote if an issuer has filed for bankruptcy. Other markets may still use the "Q" suffix for this purpose.
R	Rights
S	Shares of Beneficial Interest (SBI)
T	With warrants or with rights
U	Units
V	When issues and when distributed
W	Warrants
X	Nasdaq Fund Network (NFN)	Instrument Nasdaq uses X suffix to denote a mutual fund or money market fund instrument priced via the NFN system .
Y	American Depositary Receipts (ADRs)	Issued by Nasdaq at issuer request only.
Z	Miscellaneous situations such as certificates of preferred when issued

Please note that Nasdaq reserves the right to change its stock symbol suffix methodology as market demands and regulatory changes dictate.